I SNACK REGULARLY.

WASSEM BAKES

KEEP YOUR BLOOD SUGAR IN CHECK

What a professional baker (and snacker) learned from 14 days on a glucose monitor.

1 DON'T SNACK BETWEEN MEALS

Stick to breakfast, lunch and dinner. Snacking keeps your glucose up all day and raises your average.

2 EAT BREAKFAST LATE

Around 10 or 10:30am. A longer overnight break means a shorter eating window.

3 DON'T EAT TOO LATE

Finish dinner about 3 hours before bed, so you're not sleeping on a spike.

4 MASK YOUR SUGAR MY BEST TIP

Two bites of plain yogurt right before carbs or sweets. The fat slows things down and blunts the spike.

5 FIBER + PROTEIN FIRST

Eat veggies, beans, tofu or seeds before the carbs. Save the bread, rice and sweets for last.

6 APPLE CIDER VINEGAR TRICK

1 tbsp in a tall glass of water before a carb-heavy meal. Use a straw and rinse after, it's hard on teeth.

7 DESSERT GOES AFTER A MEAL

Never on its own. Right after a meal you get one spike instead of two.

8 SUGAR HIGH? GET MOVING

A 10 to 15 minute walk after eating, or some light yoga. Yoga works really well for me.

9 NEVER EAT CARBS NAKED

Pair them with fat, fiber or protein. Toast gets avocado, fruit gets nut butter or yogurt.

10 GO SAVORY AT BREAKFAST

A sweet breakfast sets you up for a spike-and-crash day. Start savory and keep it steady.

11 DON'T DRINK YOUR SUGAR

Juice, soda and sweet coffee drinks hit fastest. Eat whole fruit instead and drink water.

12 SLEEP AND STRESS COUNT

A bad night or a stressful day can push your glucose up, even when you eat the same.

+ TRY A CGM FOR YOURSELF

A continuous glucose monitor shows how your body reacts to your food, sleep, stress and everything you do. Two weeks taught me more than years of guessing. I thought I was healthy. My snacking was spiking me.

Everybody's different. These aren't rules and they aren't medical advice, just what worked for me. If you have diabetes, take medication or have a health condition, talk to your doctor first.
